'LIKE BERSERK ANIMAL' John Featherstonhaugh, President of the John Howard Society, said last night that he would like to see penal institutes become long-range treatment centres, improving prisoner rehabilitation.

Psychiatrist not consulted

Design of prison criticised

The president of a society dedicated to penal reform revealed yesterday that the only prison psychiatrist in Quebec was not consulted on the design of the new maximum security institution in St. Vincent de Paul.

Speaking to the Canterbury club, John Howard Society president John Featherstonhaugh said that when Dr. Bruno Cormier saw a model of the design, "he burst into tears".

Featherstonhaugh read from a letter sent by Dr. Cormier to then Justice Minister Guy Favreau in May. The letter called the new detention centre "inhumane" and a "penological anomaly" and says that it will be "a hindrance to treatment possibilities".

Dr. Cormier also criticised the government for not consulting the men who have been working with the inmates destined for the new centre.

The letter objected to the type of cell planned for the inmates and to the general design of the centre, which, it says, is "based on no valid programme".

In his address, Featherstonhaugh described the new prison, which the government has termed an "experiment".

"If this institute is an experiment", Dr. Cormier's letter says, "who are the experimenters?"

The prison consists of more than 150 solitary confinement cells and is intended for incorrigibles who must be segregated from the rest of the prisoners. The cells have no windows and only one aperture, in the ceiling, for observation.

The prisoners who will use the cells are the ones least able to stand this type of confinement, Featherstonhaugh said.

Featherstonhaugh would like to see penal institutes become long-range treatment centres. "At the present time, only 10% of the inmate population requires the maximum security measures in use", he said.

"Prisoners come out ready to charge society like a berserk animal. We would be satisfied if they came out no worse than they came in."

Dudek speaks out

Professor Louis Dudek said last night that we should appreciate world literature while remaining aware of the need for encouraging Canadian writers.

In a speech to the Polish Institute of Arts and Sciences, he said, "Those people who are interested in the works of their own nation are not parochial" — they are also reading cosmopolitan literature.

National literature is rather passé, he said. "There is no great patriotic poetry because only frustrated nationalists can produce intense poems about nationality."

He said that nationalism is not a viable concept in creating a literary genre. "Although the writer uses his experience and therefore his nationalism in his subject matter, his themes are universal."

"Poetry-making power is native to the human mind," Professor Dudek said. The only influence that nationality might have on the emergence of a poet is in creating an atmosphere conducive to creativity and productivity.

Kenniff not refused by SC, says President Sholzberg

by DON MACPHERSON

Students' Society President Sharon Sholzberg denied yesterday that CUS President Patrick Kenniff had been refused permission to address McGill students on the UGEQ referendum.

The Canadian University Press, in a release headlined "CUS President Silenced at McGill", had reported that the Students' Council had prevented Kenniff from speaking.

The release said that Kenniff "has been refused the right to speak to McGill students on the issue of a referendum to decide whether the school will retain its membership in the Union Générale des Etudiants du Québec".

It also said that Miss Sholzberg "confirmed that her executive had turned down Mr. Kenniff's bid for a public hearing" in a telephone interview on November 23.

Miss Sholzberg denied that the Students' Council had refused permission to Kenniff to speak on campus. She disclosed that Kenniff had sent a telegram to her, requesting permission to speak to students on the UGEQ referendum, stating that he would assume that permission had been denied if he received no reply within twenty-four hours.

She said that External Vice-President Ken Cabatoff telephoned Kenniff Tuesday night and invited him to speak at McGill.

"Kenniff refused, simply because before the 24-hour period [to allow the Students' Council to reply to the telegram] had elapsed, Kenniff had told CUP that he had been denied permission to speak at McGill", she said.

"What had actually happened is that when Kenniff spoke to CUP, we had not yet spoken to him".

Kenniff's telegram was sent from Ottawa at 5 pm Monday and was received at 2 am Tuesday.

Miss Sholzberg said that a

McGill students attend CRI cultural exchange

by MAUREEN O'DONNELL

Six speakers and seven delegates represented McGill yesterday at a cultural exchange sponsored by the comité des Relations Internationales (CRI) of the Collège Notre Dame.

There were some 350 French students present.

The programme, designed to promote the exchange of ideas of French and English students on Canadian politics, literature and music, is the first in which McGill has been asked to participate since its entry into UGEQ.

The delegates and speakers were well received at the Collège. London Stuart's remark, "We at McGill hope to be able to speak French better than our political leaders," prompted tumultuous applause.

Michel Shore, moderator of the panel and organiser for the CRI, said in his opening remarks that French and English students were united by their common educational goals.

Attempting to excuse the size of the McGill delegation, one of the co-ordinators said, "We didn't think that they (CRI) were serious when they first called us."

One of the students who saw the lone poster advertising the cultural exchange said, "I prefer the beer and oyster party between the engineers of U de M and McGill. That's real culture."

Ambassador Avner on Israel

Leaders worried over brain drain

by PETER ALLNUTT

One of the problems facing Israeli leaders today, aside from the Arab threat, is the emigration of talented Jews to richer countries.

This picture of present-day Israel was given last night by Gershon Avner, Israeli Ambassador to Canada, in a speech to the Student Zionist Organisation and Hillel. Avner devoted his speech to the historical events leading up to the establishment of the Jewish state.

Commenting on the outflow of talent, Avner said it was something Jews must learn to accept and look at rationally.

"However, our 'brain drain' is of a much more serious nature than that encountered by Canadians. We are in a much weaker position and need all our talented people," he added.

Avner also said there was a need for a Zionist movement in North American countries.

"The movement can be a pace-maker to mobilise public opinion to aid Israel politically. It can also be a pacemaker in the area of fundraising," he said.

"But perhaps most important it is a valuable way of preserving the Jewish way of life."

Outlining the forces which led to Israel's existence, Avner cited the many years of suffering in different countries.

Jewish history is "essentially a story of a people hounded from country to country," he said.

He also said the idea of Jews as a national ethnic group was very important to the founding of Israel.

"We remained a nation with a national outlook. And the idea of throwing the Jews out of a country because they didn't belong did not arise until after World War II."

A third factor was the closed door to Jewish immigration practised by many countries after the war.

STAFFERS FOR THIS ISSUE

dear santa, for xmas I want a whole month's sleep without visions of unfillable holes, overset copy and late, late stories dancing in my head. please fill my stocking with lots of zzzzzz. thanks to all hardy individuals who braved term papers and tests to help out-susan, henry, stephen, judy who types a mean today column, don, dave, vivian and especially don again, on photos-Bruce. goodnight roydren wherever you are. THE BIRD AND BOB.

The Herrenvolk

"I contend that we are the first race in the world, and that the more of the world we inhabit, the better it is for the human race. I contend that every acre added to our territory provides for the birth of more of the English race, who otherwise would not be brought into existence. Added to which the absorption of the greater portion of the world under our rule means the end of all wars."

No, it isn't Wilson, Heath or even Smith, but they have put Cecil Rhodes' little dicum into more modern, twentieth century terms. None of the crudities of the days of the walrus moustache and pith helmet. None of the cries of Fatherland and motherhood. Instead, a slag-heap of double-talk and double-cross sanctified by the rat trap of misused parliamentary constitutionalism.

Wilson has long since lost all credibility; he is currently in the process of losing his reason. Last week he claimed Rhodesia was a British problem, while this week's excuse is that Britain, without world assistance, can't impose oil sanctions (about as useful as a jock on Dagmar, because South Africa and her refineries have long ceased to belong to the world). Come, come, Harold, doesn't your clipping service keep you up to date on what you've just said?

And then there's Mr. Heath, who is very concerned with ensuring that no in-nocents are hurt. Like the Conservative Party, like the whites of Rhodesia, like Edward Heath.

Cecil Rhodes cheated the Africans, but he also cheated his Queen and Lord Salisbury, which, if nothing else, makes him more consistent and straight-shootin' than his successors. Not like the oil-slicked, pound-packed bigotry of the Queen's servants today.

The campaign

A cursory look at the candidates' pen-sketches carried in yesterday's issue shows there are some serious misunderstandings about the nature of student government. Hopefully, these will be cleared up by the time the great day approaches.

In the meantime, we recommend as basic reading for Election 100 that marvellous little manual, the Student Handbook. The campus at large should equip itself with this Bible before sallying forth to ask questions from our prospective leaders at candidates' meetings. That way, we can ensure that all candidates will have at least a nodding acquaintance with the way things are supposed to happen.

Perhaps even the candidates might consider having a swift glance themselves.

LETTERS

How It Was Done

Dear Sir,

Several graduate students have raised questions about the status of R. Kay, one of the representatives from the Faculty of Graduate Studies and Research on the Students' Council. I discussed the matter with Myron Galloway, Saeed Mirza and Miss Sharon Sholzberg. Apparently the following happened.

Mr. Kay was elected last fall under the old constitution of the Students' Society. He was to serve for the period of Jan. 1, 1965 to Dec. 31, 1965. Subsequent to his election the constitution was extensively revised and the term of office of graduate students was changed to July 1 to June 31.

At a meeting of the Students' Council last January a number of problems related to the transfer from the old to the new constitution were discussed. It was decided informally to extend Mr. Kay's term for six months to bring things into line with the new constitution. This decision DOES NOT APPEAR IN THE MINUTES OF THE COUNCIL MEETING. Further no notice of this action was published in the McGill Daily. I have been unable to find in the files of the PGSS any official notification of this action.

There is, as Mr. Ogunbanwo has observed, a serious constitutional point here. Can a body, without consulting or even notifying the electorate decide to extend the term of office of one of its members? This is the important question here. What are future student councils going to do if such a precedent is established?

To avoid any confusion let me say that I do not intend this letter to be in any way an attack on either Mr. Kay, or Mr. Mirza, who was the President of the SEC at the time. I simply wish to point out the facts as I know them for the information of all graduate students.

Dale Robertson
President, Post Graduate Students Society

Vision Blurred

Dear Sir,

In Tuesday's editorial, you made an attempt to disembowel another sacred cow, Treasure Van. As chairman of the organization responsible for Treasure Van, I would like to stuff the guts back in.

Your editorial contained one very penetrating insight. "We know, deep down, that the poor are getting poorer and the rich getting richer." You went on to attack Treasure Van on the mistaken assumption that it is a travelling bazaar, run in the hope that if enough liberals appease their tortured consciences by buying quaint artifacts, the economic plight of the developing countries will be alleviated. In fact, Treasure Van is run by the World University Service, a world wide association of universities to raise money for its International Program of Action.

It is true that Treasure Van merchandise is purchased from "authentic witch doctors" and other craftsmen who would normally be forced to live solely off the tourist trade. But when this merchandise is shipped to Canada and sold at a considerable markup to tortured liberals, the rake-off is used not to buy the witch doctor a new pair of Daks, but to enable a Black South African, barred from attending university in his own country to obtain a university degree by correspondence course; or to rebuild Concepcion university in Chile after its destruction by earthquake; or to build a new library in Ibaden, Nigeria; or to provide a travelling T.B. clinic in India; or to enable a student who could not otherwise do so to attend university on a WUS scholarship. Education, Mr. McFadden, is in fact the sinister aim of the organisation behind Treasure Van, and no one should be better acquainted than yourself with the contribution made by education to the economic development of a country. Admittedly, WUS will not by itself close the gap between the rich and the poor nations, and in this sense all will not be well if there are a few more Treasure Vans; but at least WUS does something.

You also attacked Treasure Van on the grounds that by selling native artifacts, it contributes to a false view of the world. This, I admit, is probably true, but the members of WUS, faced with the problem of action, are content to exploit the neo-colonialist illusions of the North American bourgeois to the benefit of the developing nations. We must act now and cannot be primarily concerned if the people who finance our action are motivated by a false consciousness of the world they are helping to build. Words, Mr. McFadden, can help these lost souls attain a true consciousness of the world they live in and I hope that you will continue to help them attain true consciousness by your excellent program of education. I further hope, Mr. McFadden, that the word will prove mightier than the Indian elephant gong.

Be careful, Mr. McFadden, when examining the "soft underbellies" of cows, sacred or otherwise, not to place your head beneath the anal orifice; your vision is in danger of being blurred.

Sholzberg...

CUP reporter informed her by telephone of Kenniff's statement to the national student wire service at 2 pm Tuesday some 21 hours after the telegram was sent and only twelve hours after it was received at the Students' Council office.

Miss Sholzberg added that the Students' Council does not have the authority to refuse anyone permission to speak on campus.

Cabatoff said that the Students' Council "did not categorically refuse Kenniff the right to speak on campus". He added that the Students' Council had phoned Kenniff shortly after his telegram was received, "to invite him to speak at McGill."

"He at that time refused categorically to come to McGill, on the grounds that he did not want to get involved in McGill's internal affairs".

When asked whether Kenniff's statement to CUP was a deliberate attempt to sabotage the UGEQ referendum, Cabatoff replied, "I don't think he acted in bad faith, but I think he made a serious mistake in giving us an ultimatum, and then giving his statement to the press before the time period of the ultimatum was up".

Kenniff was quoted by CUP as saying that in the light of the Students' Council refusal to allow him to speak at McGill, "I don't know how one can expect an enlightened vote December 1".
